

The Wise Old Owl

Once, an old owl lived in a big oak tree. Every day, he quietly watched what happened around him.

One day, he saw a young boy helping an old man carry a heavy basket. The next day, he noticed a girl shouting at her mother. The more the owl watched, the less he felt the need to speak.

As time passed, he talked less but listened more. He often heard people telling stories. Some spoke wisely, while others said things that were not true—like a woman claiming an elephant jumped over a fence, or a man boasting that he had never made a mistake.

The owl kept watching and listening. He noticed that some people grew kinder and better, while others grew worse. But the owl himself became wiser each day.

Moral: If we observe more, talk less, and listen carefully, we can become wiser too.
